First-Grade Teachers Enroll Kids in Black Lives Matter March

Central Park School for Children in Durham, North Carolina has enrolled grade-school students in a "Black Lives March and Rally" scheduled for March 17, 2016. The teachers can opt-in or opt-out their classes, but parents have not been given a choice.

Stef Bernal-Martinez, a teacher of 6-year-old children, signed up all the children in her class, most of whom are Caucasians, for a "Black Lives March and Rally" to take place during the school day, at the city's downtown Central Park and Farmer's Market. Ms. Bernal-Martinez describes herself as a "Radical Queer Progressive Educator" and "white-passing Xicana."[1]

The event, like the Black Lives Matter movement itself, is less a black thing than a radical, divide-and-conquer, civilization-wrecking strategy of elite leftists such as George Soros. Two out of three African-Americans prefer the term "All Lives Matter" to "Black Lives Matter" according to a national August, 2015 Rasmussen poll.[2] The grade school is predominantly Caucasian, but run by radical leftists. Naturally the school didn't send the parents consent forms.

The school's K-4 Associate Director, Raenel Duncan-Edmonds, brags the school is training "activists." Parents, particularly families with police officers, have objected to their children being recruited as Black Lives Matter marchers. Black Lives Matter has repeatedly called for violence against police officers in the past.[3] It is not known if the children will be made to chant,"Pigs in a blanket, fry 'em like bacon," as has been chanted at other Black Lives Matter events. In October, 2015, Black Lives Matter supporters cheered the murder of an African-American police officer outside a Harlem hospital.[4]

Some dissenting parents have been afraid to speak out. Consider just last month. Decorated Marine veteran Chris Marquez was cornered outside a Washington, DC McDonalds by a gang of teenagers. Marquez was brutally hit on the side of the head by a handgun- wielding youth when he apparently gave the wrong answer to the question, "Do you believe Black Lives Matter?"[5]

The phrase "black lives matter" is a simple statement about which all people of goodwill readily agree. The problem with the Black Lives Matter organization is the insidious insinuation that most Caucasians place little value on African-Americans' lives. Black Lives Matter propaganda about an alleged epidemic of Caucasian racism erodes hope and quashes dreams of hundreds of thousands of young African-Americans, consigning them to powerless, resentful anger. Black Lives Matter sets a tone of encouraging violence against Caucasians.

Four months after the shooting of Michael Brown, between waves of Black Lives Matter protests, twenty miles away from Ferguson, four teens of color attacked and beat 32-year-old Zemir Begic, a Caucasian, while his pregnant fiance watched. As they beat Begic to death with hammers they screamed "f*ck white people" and "Kill the white people."[6] After whooping up the mobs prior to Mr. Begic's murder, even Obama's Justice Department later admitted the Michael Brown hands-up-don't-shoot narrative was a lie.[7]

Trayvon Martin was Black Lives Matter's original inspiration. A week after Martin, was killed, two older, African-American teenagers poured gasoline on a 13-year-old boy in Kansas City, Missouri. They followed him home from school, set him on fire, and then crowed “You get what you deserve, white boy.”[8]

Two months ago an African-American man who tortured and executed two Caucasian teens made a Black Lives Matter speech at his sentencing.[9] There are multiple instances of Black Lives Matter protesters beating pedestrians.[10] Black Lives Matter protesters have destroyed both public and private property across the country.[11] This includes two individuals who met at the Ferguson riots then later admitted to plotting to blow up a police station, the St. Louis County prosecutor and the Ferguson police chief.[12]

When already economically-disadvantaged individuals are told they are oppressed because of their skin pigment, by an identifiable group of another skin pigment, little wonder riots have occurred and so many innocent people have been beaten, set afire, shot, and killed in retaliation by Black Lives Matter participants. In America in 2016, little children of every color are taught by their public schools to march under banners suggesting Caucasians are moral reprobates upon whom it is appropriate to direct physical violence.

But hasn't Black Lives Matter been a response to a rash of Caucasian police shooting young African-American males? Though it is not well reflected in the media, cross-racial police-shooting deaths happen in both directions. Trayvon Martin and Michael Brown are household names the world over. Much more obscure are unarmed, young, male, Caucasian victims of African-American police shootings.

In 2014, 18-year-old Gilbert Collar was shot by an African-American police officer. The same year 20-year-old Dillon Taylor was shot exiting a 7-Eleven in Utah. More disturbing, 6-year-old Jeremy Mardis was shot and killed in the front seat of his unarmed father's pickup truck when two African-American officers opened fire after a traffic stop. The officers' body camera show the driver, Jeremy's 25-year-old father, had his hands up as the African-American officers opened fire on the boy.[13]

Several parents have suggested that if the grade school must do a march and rally, they should switch the theme to “All Lives Matter.” However, the school is not backing down. Perhaps it is because Black Lives Matter posterboys look more like Obama's children and Black Lives Matter victims look more like Trump's children. Whatever the reason, the school's director John Heffernan has quashed dissenting views on the school's parents' facebook page.

Black Lives Matter claims African-Americans are disproportionately killed by police for being black. At first glance, this seems plausible. Twice as many Caucasians are killed by police, but there five times more Caucasians than African-Americans. Black Lives Matter attributes this disparity solely to racism.

However, there is evidence to suggest other causal factors. African-Americans may be more likely to encounter violent confrontations with police than Caucasians because they commit significantly more violent crimes than Caucasians per capita. In 2013, blacks committed 5,375 murders, while Caucasians committed 4,396 murders. Yet Caucasians are over twice as likely to be shot and killed by police. After adjusting for the homicide rate, Caucasians are 1.7 times more likely than blacks die at the hands of police.

Black Lives Matter leads some number of African-Americans to believe that they are in ongoing peril of physical attack by Caucasians. African-Americans commit eight times more crimes against Caucasians than the reverse. When you factor in the greater number of Caucasians in the US, an African-American person is 27 times more likely to attack a Caucasian person than vice versa.

Alveda King, the niece of civil rights icon Martin Luther King, says that the tactics employed by the Black Lives Matter movement do not represent the principles for which her uncle stood. “Of course black lives matter, all lives matter.”[14]

Black Lives Matter promotes antagonism against people of a different race based on their belief of the innate wrongness of that other race. This is the traditional, standard-dictionary definition of racism.

Race-baiting by the Left began with Stalin stating on record that there was an explicit Communist Party program was to stir up racial animosity among African-Americans in the United States. David Rockefeller praised Mao Tse-tung who slaughtered over 60+ million people Chinese. Today the Rockefeller Foundation and other foundations are contributing heavily to Black Lives Matter activities.[15] [16] [17]

Admitted-WWII-Nazi-collaborator, billionaire George Soros has donated millions to fund divisive revolutionary street actions in the Ukraine, Arab Spring, and now Black Lives Matter.

The methods employed by Black Lives Matter have been violent and racially polarizing. Black Lives Matter “activism” has led to deaths of both African-Americans and Caucasians. Self-proclaimed radical educators dragging children into this ugly and sometimes deadly melee is wrong by any standard.
